In essence it provides that where a patent specification is found to promise specific utility, that promised utility must be demonstrated or soundly predicted as of the Canadian filing date. Not surprisingly, the promise doctrine has raised the ire of both patentees and Canada's trading partners, particularly the U.S. government.

The Promise Doctrine finds its roots in the "False Promise Doctrine" from the United Kingdom in the early part of the 20th Century. At that time, patents in the UK were a grant from the Crown exercising its own discretionary power. It was presumed that the Crown granted patents on the entirety of the application being true. The courts would thus consider the patent on an invention which ...

specifications. We will also show how the promise of the patent is not, strictly speaking, an independent legal rule but rather a corollary of the method of purposive construction for interpreting patent claims. Just as the scope of patent claim is determined from the perspective of the skilled reader, so too is the promise of the patent.

The Promise Theme & the Theology of Rest

The doctrine of consideration has come under increasing fire in recent times due to its somewhat intractable nature and inconsistencies, however it can be argued that much of the ill effects it had engendered in the past have been mitigated through the developments of law. Consideration provides a valuable service to law in determining which promises should be enforced and which are to be ...

Doctrine of Consideration - Law Teacher

The doctrine of consideration is based upon the idea that a promisee must give or promise to give something in return for the promise or unless the promisor has obtained or been promised something in return. The traditional concept of consideration is an objective one as only the things the parties said and did are taken into account, rather than their actual intentions.
